Subject: Re: Extension suggestion for on which (track)side of a crosSection the referenced ocp is Posted by christian.rahmig on Thu, 30 Aug 2018 15:25:12 GMT

Dear all,

Am 30.08.2018 um 11:29 schrieb Christian Rahmig:
> [...]
> (3) Where is the (virtual) center of the OCP?
>
> The center of the OCP is a virtual point and from operational > perspective it is defined by the place where the operation/control is > done. This is not necessarily the station building. The right question > here: In which direction does the train driver has to look to see the > (virtual) operator. From my understanding it makes sense to have the > possibility to model this information. Since it is an information that > differs from track to track depending on their orientation and location,
> I agree with having such an attribute then at <crossSection> element.
> Instead of @ocpRepSide I prefer a name @ocpCenterSide, but of course I > am open for any other proposal as well.

I filed a Trac ticket [1] for this point.

[1] https://trac.railml.org/ticket/340

Best regards
Christian

--
Christian Rahmig - Infrastructure scheme coordinator
railML.org (Registry of Associations: VR 5750)
Phone Coordinator: +49 173 2714509; railML.org: +49 351 47582911
Altplauen 19h; 01187 Dresden; Germany   www.railml.org